New Mexico's seasonally adjusted unemployment shows signs of improvement according to the most recent statistics. The state's unemployment rate was 5.6 percent in March of this year, down from 5.8 percent in February and 6.3 percent a year ago.

The national unemployment rate has also lowered since the last year, though it has stagnated. This March, the rate was 4.1 percent for the seventh consecutive month, down from 4.5 percent in March 2017, according to information from the New Mexico Department of Work Force Solutions.

In McKinley County, the unemployment rate for March was 7.1 percent, down from 7.7 percent in February. In neighboring Cibola County, the unemployment rate for March was 6.3 percent, which was lower than the 6.8 percent unemployment rate in February.

The state unemployment statistics are a month behind due to the length of time it takes to compile them.

"I think this (unemployment decrease) is an example of seasonal jobs coming into play," Bill Lee, executive director at the Gallup-McKinley County Chamber of Commerce, said. "As the weather gets warmer, particularly in the more rural counties in New Mexico, the workload picks up."

According to Work Force statistics, the private service-providing industries were up 4,700 jobs, or 0.9 percent, while the goods-producing industries were up 4,200 jobs, representing a gain of 4.7 percent. Trade, transportation, and utilities were up 400 jobs, or 0.3 percent, according to the statistics.
