Best in Show Night: Celebrating Ceremonial's legacy in a new way

Best in Show Night is the brainchild of Gallup trader Emerald Tanner.

"My biggest reason for wanting to do this is to celebrate art and artists," she said. "Ceremonial gets such incredible museum-quality pieces representative of all of the major tribes around Gallup; we wanted to share them with the public and bring a little piece of Ceremonial back downtown."

Making this special event extra special, Tanner has borrowed artwork from Ceremonial's past from collectors to display alongside this year's winners.

Experience the rich legacy of Ceremonial with half a dozen Best in Show awardees from previous years, including a 1937 Teec Nos Pos style weaving. Teec Nos Pos, in Northeast Arizona, produces weavings that are considered to be some of the most intricately detailed of all Navajo designs.

The 1937 Best in Show winner is known for its immensely complicated border—"one of the most complicated we've ever seen," Tanner said. "It's worth it to come to our event, just to see this rug!"

Winners from the 1970s and 80s will also be on display. Event attendees can marvel at an extremely detailed and delicate three-piece woman's jewelry set crafted by the "Queen of Needlepoint," Zuni silversmith and lapidary artist, Edith Tsabetsaye.

Representing Navajo jewelry will be 1982 Best in Show-winning "corn bracelet" made by master silversmith Lee A. Yazzie. Taking seven months to create, this piece is "an absolute wonder in terms of design and mechanics," Tanner said.

Having been exhibited in museums worldwide, Yazzie's corn bracelet is now on public view again at Best in Show Night in downtown Gallup.
